The Cincinnati Horror.

The disaster at Robinson's Opera House, Cincinnati, on Saturday afternoon is thus described by Mr. Eckel, who was one of the first to rush into the fatal vestibule on hearing the cry of fire and seeing the crowd of people rush out:

I was standing on the sidewalk talking to some gentlemen, when I heard the alarm of fire, and as one of my children was inside I naturally made an effort to force my way in. The entrance was completely clogged with people, however, and I never got beyond the middle of the vestibule. My idea is that some of the first crowd that rushed out slipped on the steps and fell, and the immense throng that followed them did not think of steps or anything else except to cling themselves out of the inner doorway. The consequence was that there was a general piling up of prostrate and struggling people, those who followed the first rush falling on top of the others as soon as they got to the steps. The people, men, women and children, piled up around me and the other men who made their way into the vestibule, waist-high, and still they kept coming.

It was simply awful. Men and women were groaning, children were shrieking, and by the gasps and dead staring eyes of some of the women and children I knew they were being smothered to death. We pulled out all we could, and worked as fast as we could, but it seemed that they piled up as fast as we jugged them out, and some were so tightly wedged in we could not but have them killed either way. One poor lady, who was in the line, with the tiling with a dozen women and children on top of her, her face flattened against the floor, and her tongue, which protruded two or three inches, being trampled on by others trying to work themselves out. One little white haired boy, who I saw was almost smothered to death, thrust his hand to me from under two or three persons who were crowding him down, and I managed to catch hold of his arm. He worked the other arm out somehow, and a policeman caught hold of it. We tugged and tugged at him for several minutes, and it took our united strength to pull him out, and we were all strong men, too.

They would catch me by the legs and try to pull themselves out that way, and we were all in danger every second of going down with the whole crowd. There must have been as many as a hundred and fifty people piled up to that vestibule as I have described, and I don't think that if the world ever have issued from that place a couple of policemen had not broken through the office to the west of the entrance and fought their way to the inner door, and commenced throwing the people back into the house in order to give us a chance to extricate the already in the vestibule. My God! if there had been a fire in the house it must have roasted half the audience to death, the way the people were piled up and clogging the main exit. The work of the policemen at the inner doors, in throwing the people back until quiet was restored, undoubtedly saved many lives. It enabled us to clear the vestibule of the living and the dead, and when that was done, and the alarmed danger got to passing out something like order, the danger was over.

The scenes in and about the Opera House after the accident were heartrending. Fathers and mothers were there to look for their children; brothers and sisters for brothers and sisters. Everybody was wild with apprehension and fear. The vast crowd surged and thronged about the doors of Mr. Hamilton's law office and Esquire Riley's office, where five of the killed or injured had been taken.

In Hamilton's office were three women terribly injured and writhing in the agonies of death, while their sharp, shrill screams echoed over the horror-struck multitude in the streets.

In Esquire Riley's a boy and a woman lay dead.

Upstairs in the theatre four dead bodies were laid out, one girl, two boys and a woman, and two more had been taken to the hospital who are not expected to live.

After the accident, what of the audience remained were gathered into the seats, and the play proceeded. Those in the house were not aware of the extent of the calamity in front, and the horrors of it were kept from them. His Honor Mayor Johnson, hearing of the situation of affairs, went within and indignantly ordered the curtain to be dropped and the alleged brought to an end. It was quietly going on while in the theatre-room half-a-dozen crushed and mangled bodies were lying.

LEGER'S FLUID (RED), THE UNIVERSAL DISINFECTANT. (Permanently of Soda.) It is the only true disinfectant known, all other preparations sold for this purpose being merely deodorizers (or articles which possess the property of overpowering unpleasant smells by their own pungent and often disagreeable and dangerous qualities.) It is particularly adapted for disinfecting sick rooms in cases of typhus fever, small pox, cholera, scarlet fever, diarrhoea, and all contagious diseases, and for purifying rooms in which there are dead bodies, removing at once all unpleasant smells, and destroying effectually any latent germs of disease. By placing the diluted fluid in dishes or basins, about bed chambers, school rooms, work shops, hospital wards, &c., it keeps the air in a perfect state of purity. For stables, slaughter houses, butchers' shops, dairies, cellars, &c., it is invaluable, keeping them in a perfectly wholesome state, by merely sprinkling the diluted fluid over the floors and walls. It keeps dust bins, water closets, drains, urinals, &c., sweet and wholesome, by using once or twice a day. For sale by

The delicate stomach will not reject this agreeable and invigorating medicine. It is particularly adapted for Dyspepsia, Nervous Headaches, Indigestion and Heartburn, Weakness, Languor and Debility, Torpid Condition of the Liver, Obstinate Constipation and Loss of Appetite. They are also a sure preventive of Ague and Fever. They are pleasant to the taste, and the most delicate stomach will not reject this agreeable medicine. Along water courses and in low and marshy districts they will prove a safe safeguard against the diseases incident to such sections of the country. Weak and debilitated females will derive great benefit from their use. In quart bottles, at $1 each. Prepared only by
